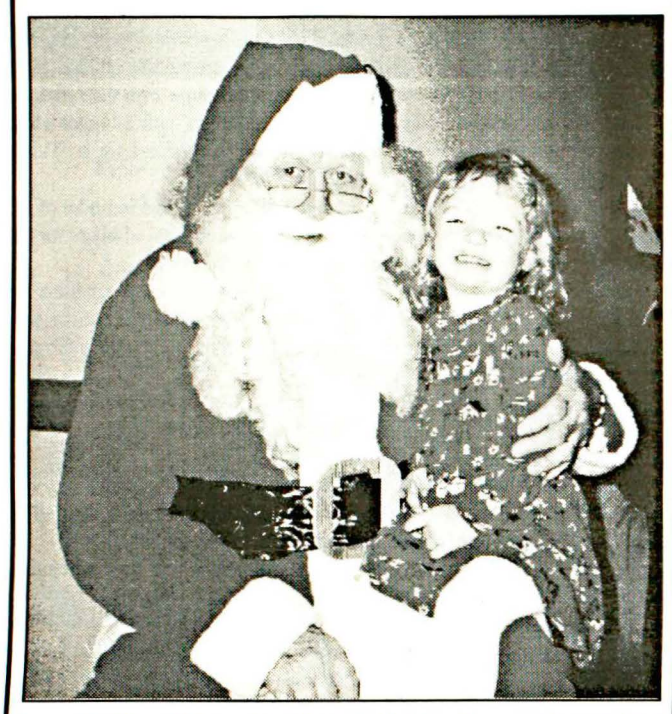
Trust me, I'm Santa



Amanda Cline tells Santa all about it at the Lemon Grove Sheriff's annual pancake breakfast. This jolly old elf bears a striking resemblance to a local, retired doctor of reindeer medicine.

Wallace Dorman dead at 79

Wallace D. Dorman, 79, died on Dec. 7 at Alvarado Convalescent and Rehabilitation Hospital from complications of a rare spinal cord disorder.

With his brother, V. J. Dorman, and nephew, former Lemon Grove Mayor James Dorman, Wallace Dorman had a law practice in Lemon Grove for 47 years,

He was born Nov. 10, 1917, in Parlier, Calif., where he attended school and was invoved in sports. He received his Bachelor of Arts degree in 1940 and his law degree in 1948 both from Stanford University.

Dorman was involved in all aspects of community work, particularly the Zoological Society of San Diego and the YMCA. He was a 60-year member of the YMCA and, at his death, was a member of the Camp Board. He served many years as a Lemon Grove Chamber of Commerce board member.

He is survived by his wife, Lita Trent Dorman; two daughters, Nora Batterton of Columbus, Ohio and Sheila and Dr. Geffrey Graham of Upland, Calif.; stepson Ric Trent and his wife, Resa, and stepdaughter, Logynn Ferrall and her husband, Jeffrey Solomon of Austin, Texas; and five grandchildren.

The family requests that any donations be sent to the Zoological Society of San Diego.

Come party with the press

The Lemon Grove Review invites all readers to a "Feliz Adios" party, to be held from 7 - 10 p.m. on Saturday at Hickey's Place Books, 7882 La Mesa Blvd. (between University Avenue and El Cajon Blvd.) in La Mesa.

Community correspondents, columnists and the publisher will be on hand to share holiday treats and music with readers and subscribers. Hickey's Place, owned by local authors Ken Kuhlken and Terry Hertzler, is going out of business after 16 months and will have lots of book bargains.

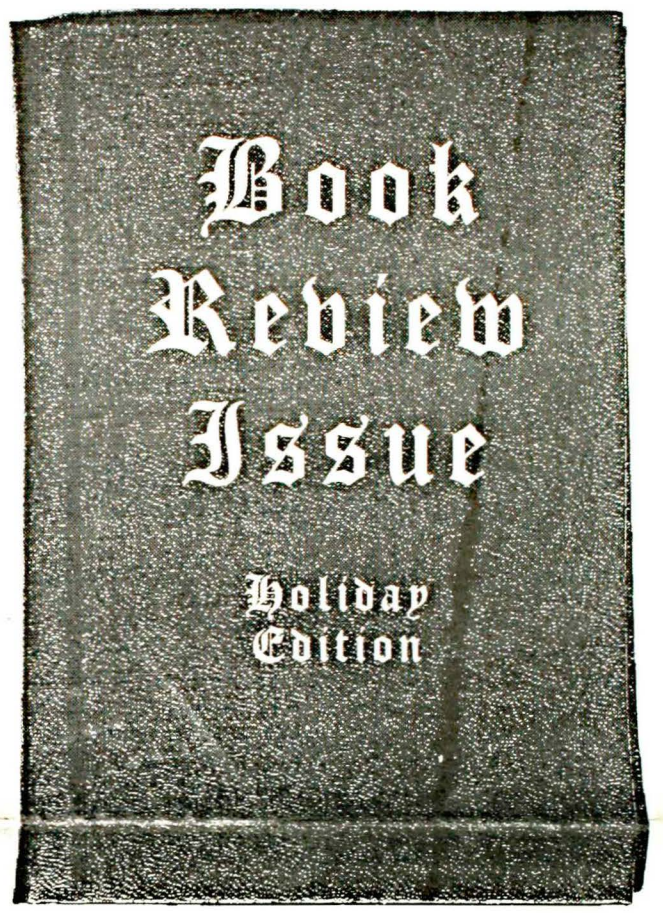
Call 469-0101 for more information.

Judging from a rise in book sales relative to a slump in the movie business, it might be safe to say that reading is making a comeback.

Maybe people's eyes are finally suffering visual overload from MTV-style television. Maybe they're tired of the monotonous recycling of plots and characters on both big and little screens. Instead of just watching the results of someone else's imagination, maybe they actually want to use their own.

Obviously, readers of this paper need no lectures extolling the virtues of written communication. We publish papers because we want to encourage reading and good writing. To that end, we will be publishing a quarterly "Book Review Issue." This is the first attempt, culling reviews from local writers and Friends of the Library chapters, sprinkled with recommended reading lists from area booksellers and book experts.

We hope it helps. On behalf of the writers and staff at Forum Publications, we wish you a peaceful and heart-warming holiday season.

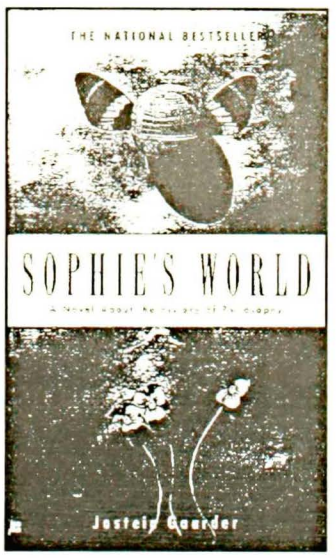


Sophie's World
by Jostein Gaarder

Review by Ann Ruethling
Chinaberry Books

Last Mother's Day, one of my long-time fantasies came true: I was able to indulge myself in an entire day of solitary bliss on the beach.

Choosing just the right book for my day of leisure was quite easy actually. I had begun reading Sophie's World the day before, picking it up out of curiosity more than anything. (I had to see for myself how a book about "the history of philosophy" could be an international bestseller). It didn't take long for me to realize that I had picked up a book unlike any I had ever read.



The main character in the book is almost-15-year-old Sophie who, one day, receives a mysterious note in her mailbox, asking two questions: "Who are you?" and "Where does the world come from?" It is only fitting that a girl of Sophie's age be the main character for this book. No longer a child, but not yet an adult, she is asked by a mysterious philosopher, "Are you a child who has not yet become world-weary or are you a philosopher who will vow never to become so?" Sophie had already begun to lose some of a child's sense of wonder, so she chose to accept her invitation for a correspondence course in philosophy.

Along with Sophie, I was soon transported into the world of philosophy — from Socrates to Martin Luther to Sartre. In Sophie's new world, I found myself pondering questions I hadn't explored in years. And, like Sophie, I began awakening to the magical sense of wonder in my own world (with a little help from the Pacific Ocean).

At day's end, as my family treated me to a Mother's Day barbecue, I tried in vain to describe this book to them. Any description I could offer didn't do it justice. Yes, it's about philosophy, but it's just as much about history. But that's not the whole picture either. Sophie's World is one of the most brilliant mystery novels I've ever read. You've just got to read it for yourself.

I should also mention that this could be a perfect read for fathers on Father's Day, too — with or without the Pacific Ocean. This book has captivated both men and women, anyone who could use a little "wonder" in their lives.

Hitler's Willing Executioners: Ordinary Germans and the Holocaust
by Daniel Johan Goldhagen

Review by Margarette Carr
Friends of the Lemon Grove Library

This highly original and exhaustively researched study focuses on the people who actually carried out the killing of Jews during Germany's Nazi period. It studies ordinary people — in the hundreds of thousands — who willingly, and even enthusiastically, tortured and executed Jews when given the opportunity.

Six million Jews perished in he Holocaust, many

B Words

by Bob Burns

News from the North Pole

This just in from the North Pole and you know who. Word has reached these ears that Lemon Grove is a very important stop along the Kris Kringle itinerary on Dec. 25. Being a somewhat privileged person in the inner circle of Claus people, I am proud to relate a few tidbits that are not common knowledge. It seems that there are some real deserving inhabitants of Lemonville, and that they will be very happy come Christmas morning.

First there is that beautiful Jillian Lovejoy who is getting a baby brother. She is such a little doll, what could be more appropriate. Of course, Doug and Mary will be most happy as well.

Rose Pallazollo says that she wants a check, but most probably she wants to work some shifts in her new senior patrol uniform.

Undersheriff Jack Drown wants about a dozen new Crown Vics for his fleet of patrol vehicles. He asked twice that amount, but his big boss Bill vetoed the request as being unrealistic.

City Manager Doug Yount will be getting a smoother running city and a reasonable solution to the problems of implementing the general plan. Little Taylor and Brett will benefit by having more time with their dad.

Mayor Mary Sessom whispered that she could do with a bigger gavel to use at the council meetings. She lost out on the request for a "Tickle Me, Elmo" doll, though. They are just not to be had.

Capt. Yolanda Collins asked if Santa could hurry up the remodel of the station. He is still very wrapped up in deciding what kind of bikes for the bike patrol, and said that remodel is next on the list.

Deputies Lenice Lopez, and Valerie Bickel want better spatulas for next year's pancake breakfast. The cakes couldn't be better, but the new utensils will prevent the "flip tunnel syndrome" that often afflicts the professional flapjack tossers.

Troy Goodman took some of the cakes home, "to put under the tree for Santa", he claimed. Some were the special blueberry cakes, but who wants to bet that Santa won't see any of them?

Craig Lake is overloading the telepathic circuits in asking help with the trash fiasco at the county level. He is even suggesting that it all be wrapped tightly in red tape and shot off into the sun. Nice try, Craig.

Sgt. Manny Castillo simply asked that it not rain next year when they put on the breakfast again. Cooking out in the downpour can really stretch the deputies sunny dispositions.

Tom Clabby had to beg off the affair and be about getting his zillion lights strung up at his home. He also confided, that pancakes are just too fattening, an it is getting harder and harder for him to climb that Queen Palm each year.

Helen Ofield wants a Taj Mahal, with underground parking and a sky-room on top. She quotes someone with, "Some say, 'Why?' Others say, 'Why not?'" How can Santa resist such a pretty lady with such wonderful vision? He must come through for her, and we all will benefit as well.

Ken Sellers has asked for a new multi-purpose electric drill, but I am told that he will have to wait until Christmas morning. Maybe if he puts a martini under the tree for Santa, it would be more effective than cookies.

My request of Santa?? Not much, just another 50 years with my dear wife, Jackie ...

gassed in death camps, many more shot, many starved to death in "work" camps, many walked to death during death marches. Who were the people who did the actual killing? Why did they kill?

Were they all "following orders," influenced by peer pressure, goaded by hope of material gain or career advancement, "brainwashed" by a charismatic leader, coerced with threats to themselves or their families? Remember these perpetrators were ordinary people — men and women — farmers, nurses, school teachers, factory workers, clerks, laborers, domestics, Catholics and Protestants — with families, who volunteered to serve as camp guards or policemen.

They might have been expected to respond to the situation the same way we would. But they didn't. They killed Jews.

The difference for Germans in the '30s and '40s was the confluence of their longstanding cultural assumption of eliminationist antisemitism and a leader who was willing to allow them the freest possible expression of it.

Goldhagen had convinced me through his meticulous research and highly cogent arguments. His book is a fascinating exposition of one of the most critical periods in human history, and superbly written as well.

Tempting Miss Prissy by Sharon Ihle

Review by Maureen Caudill
San Diego Writers Monthly

Award-winning author Sharon Ihle of El Cajon charms and delights in her newest Western romance, Tempting Miss Prissy. In a tale as deliciously irresistible as icy lemonade on a sizzling summer day, she teams a not — quite-innocent heroine and a sexy-as-sin rogue with highly entertaining results.

Priscilla Stillbottom dreams of becoming a professional singer, despite her less than stellar voice. With only $3 in her pocket and on the run from an unfortunate past, she talks her way into a job as a saloon nightingale in the Colorado mining town of Central City. There she becomes an instant comedic hit as Miss Prissy and Her Little Lamb, the latter played by an unfortunately flatulent St. Bernard dog with comic timing to rival Jerry Lewis.

Prissy also catches the eye of the saloon's resolutely bachelor owner, Payton Cobb. When romance blossoms between them, Prissy's shy-but-eager inexperience and Payton's reluctantly chivalrous nature throw boulders in the way of their romance. Payton reluctantly casts off the mantle of bachelorhood, not realizing that marriage is not something Prissy can consider.

When Prissy's lies about her past catch up with her in the form of the man she has been running from, practically the entire town rallies to her support and Payton and Miss Prissy arrive at an eminently satisfying conclusion.

Tempting Miss Prissy constantly delights with its sense of period and location, displayed with the natural unselfconsciousness of a true storyteller. The depth of the author's research is evident but not obtrusive, adding richness of detail without overwhelming or distracting the reader from the story.

The innocent and the rake is a classic conflict in romance novels, but Tempting Miss Prissy soars far above its roots to offer three-dimensional characters with real, human dreams and failings. Prissy is neither as prissy as her name nor as bland as an ingenue. Instead, she's a complex person with a bone-deep courage and a genuinely optimistic nature-a trait that has survived tribulations that would have crushed the optimism in a person with less inner strength.

Miss Ihle reveals her mastery of her craft in this well-structured tale, written at the top of her form. With her characteristic humor and wit, she beguiles the reader into a deliciously enjoyable good time. In its sheer entertainment value, Tempting Miss Prissy is a glorious indulgence and a delightful temptation for any reader.

Material World: A global family portrait by Peter Menzel

Children Just Like Me by Barnabas & Anabel Kindersley

Reviews by Ann Ruethling
Chinaberry Books

Material World is the most eye-opening, human, absolutely stunning book I have seen in years. I hope every child in America gets a chance to spend some time with it. It is quite simply, an amazing book!

Simple in concept, but exquisitely executed, this book is a gigantic photo essay on families. Photographed outside their homes with all their worldly goods, these are "average" families from countries all across the earth. Brief text and a table of statistics elaborate how this family fits into their world. From the detailed statistics, we learn about their country and we learn about the family.

The comparisons between countries are fascinating. We get an intimate glimpse into their daily lives from the text and the photos. We see them at work and how their children spend their day. We see what their homes are like and what the earth looks like where they live. We see the poverty, the affluence, the dignity, the smiles. The photos in this book fill my heart with smiles and my eyes with tears.

Paperback 255pp $25.00

Material World is not geared toward young children, (although it captivates them with its photographs.) Children Just Like Me, however, is a natural for the younger set. Full of photographs of children, it is packed with information and insights about what makes youngsters tick in such varied places as Mongolia, Rajasthan, Ajllata Grande, New Mexico, Sulawesi and Australia.

We meet Yannis from Greece, Daisuke from Japan, Taylor from New York, and many more. There are children from both industrialized and developing nations, children from busy cities and remote rural communities, and children from tribal cultures. Most live with families, but Suchart, a novice monk, lies in a monastery and Tadesse, an Ethiopian boy, lives in an orphanage. We meet their siblings, mother and father, learn how the family makes a living and see their home. We learn a bit about their religion, find out about the food they eat and their favorite games.

One of the best things about each child's colorful and double-page spread is the close-up photograph of them in unassuming, everyday attire, with their autograph — often in an alphabet new to us.

Children Just Like Me is really an extraordinary book which makes our world seem both smaller and bigger at the same time.

Lily White by Susan Isaacs

Review by Mary Vinson
Friends of the Lemon Grove Library

Lily "Lee" White, criminal defense lawyer, narrates her defense of a con man charged with murder. He has had a successful "love 'em and leave 'em" career, courting lonely women, then disappearing with large amounts of money willingly given to him in expectation of marriage.

It seems clear that this time he murdered the mark, whose strangled body was found in her own home, but what was his motive? Lee begins to wonder whether he might be covering for someone else, and she finds evidence that indicates another presence at the crime scene.

While the Torkelson case unfolds, Lee White's personal story unfolds, too: her birth into a wealthy family, privileged childhood on a Long Island estate, with a dysfunctional family surrounding her.

When Lee married the blueblood son of the family next door, she was sure that she was the happiest of young women — and for the first time seemed assured of the love and approval of both parents, and of her pampered younger sister.

Both Lee's personal life and the Torkelson criminal case have twists and turns, unexpected developments, deceits and hidden plots. Nothing is predictable about this book. Surprises will jump out at you, right to the last line.

The NBA Finals: A Fifty-Year Celebration by Roland Lazenby

Review by Greg Eichelberger

I'm a statistics man. Not only do I want to know who won the 1906 World Series, but I like to know about each game, and the story behind the box score.

That's why the new book by Roland Lazenby, The NBA Finals: A Fifty-Year Celebration, was right up my alley.

Dedicated to "all of the guys who played when the lights weren't so bright, and the money wasn't so good," this tome features a forward by Detroit Pistons guard, Joe Dumars (the MVP of the 1989 sweep over the LA Lakers), and an informative, knowledgeable, easy-to-read style that puts you right in the middle of basketball history.

phia Warriors' four-games-to-one triumph over the Chicago Stags in the 1947 classic to the Chicago Bulls' six-game victory over the Seattle Supersonics last year, this book is chocked full of facts, figures and inside dope concerning the apex of the 82-game professional roundball season.

Lazenby writes in a confident, fluid verse, buttressing his pages with interviews from Red Auerbach, Jerry West, Oscar Robinson, Lew Alcindor, Bill Walton, Ervin "Magic" Johnson, Larry Bird, Bill Walton, Adrian Dantley, Dennis Rodman, and Michael Jordon, as well as relying on the games most experienced and influential sportswriters and photographers.

And while many may not care that the 1957-58 St. Louis Hawks were the last all-white team to win a championship, and the only squad to defeat the Boston Celtic in the finals until 1985; or that the Lakers (after moving from Minneapolis, where they claimed five crowns in six years) lost in seven NBA finals before finally coming up big in 1972, the fact is, people who enjoy rolling around in such trivia love it.

For those who think they know everything about professional basketball, Lazenby tosses in an occasional off-speed curve to keep you humble. And it will leave those who have never watched these titanic struggles anxious to see what it's all about.

Nathan's Run
by John Gilstrap

Review by Mary Vinson
Friends of the Lemon Grove Library

Action in this thriller begins with the savage killing of a guard in a juvenile detention facility. A 12-year-old boy is accused of the crime and branded a cop-killer. He escapes after the killing and is pursued by the police. Orphaned and alone, the boy has nobody to turn to for help but must rely on himself as he tries to elude the police. An unlikely source of comfort to the child is his telephone conversations with the host of a radio talk show, whose audience is divided into those who think the boy innocent and those who want to see him picked up immediately and the death penalty imposed.

A contract killer moves quietly through the story, slipping with snakelike silence through its pages. The action is non-stop. Only in the final pages, as the story reaches its surprising conclusion, do the authorities recognize that there is more to this case than they suspected.

1. Tao Te Ching by Lao-Tzu
I don't read Chinese, so I can't say what is the best translation-something small and simple. This book, these words have made more sense than any other thing I have every read in my life — as much as words ever made to me — that might be saying something.

2. Alice in Wonderland by Lewis Carroll
Lewis Carroll may have been something of a gentle pervert — but so are most of us — gentle or not. Please enjoy one of the more enduring stories in the history of English literature, if only because "curiouser and curiouser" is still a term for the times.

3. Archaic Revival by Terrance McKenna
Anything by this man is worth reading. Ethnobotanist shamanologist and, to my mind, one of the prime movers of millennial thought. Start with 1992's "Archaic Revival" and go-go-go ...

4. Wise Children by Angela Carter
I've heard Ms. Carter's books called "adult fairytales" — good enough. Think magical surrealism if it's not too redundant a thought.

5. Watermelon Sugar by Richard Brautigan
He's probably most well-known for Trout Fishing in America and doing a Hemingway exit — but this one is my favorites. Short, eerily touching and whimsical read.

6. Bastard Out of Carolina by Dorothy Allison
This story captures, rather brilliantly I think, the real experience of American "family values" — the good, the bad and the transcending of it all.

Review by Ann Ruethling
Chinaberry Books

Would that every child were given such wonderful advice by a grandparent: "when you grow up, you must do something to make the world more beautiful."

This is the 1982 winner of the American Book Award and was the New York Times Best Children's Book of the Year. It is the story of a young girl who vows to travel and see faraway places and to live beside the sea. But there is one more thing she must do, and the book follows her while she travels, grows older and figures out that something which will mak the world more beautiful. (The gardeners and flower-lovers among will especially enjoy the outcome.)

The illustrations are colorful and warm, as is th aracter, Miss Rumphius, and the spirit of this lovely book. No sirree: not bad advice at all for a grandchild to get. (3-7 yrs.)

Behind the Lines
by W.E.B. Griffin

Review by Bob Vinson
Friends of the Lemon Grove Library

This is #6 in Griffin's stories of the Marine Corps. Many of the characters are continuing, known to the reader through previous books in the series. In this one, Franklin Roosevelt, Bill Donovan, Douglas MacArthur and other high-level figures play major roles.

In the Philippines, in WWII, a man calls himself "General" sets up a guerrilla operation on the island of Mindanao. He gathers around him a motley crew of men, American and Filipino, who have escaped capture and they set out to harass the Japanese.

Politicians and the brass play their own games with whether, who, and how much aid and support will be provided to the jungle fighters, or even whether the messages sent on ancient radio and decoding equipment are real or are a trick by the enemy. The action slows to a slog through the jungle in the book's second half, but the reader will want to stick with it to see whether or not the good guys prevail.

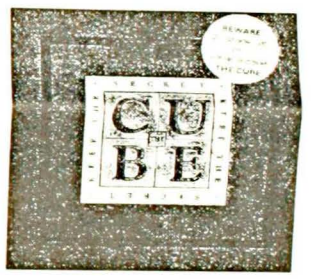
The Way We Wore: Styles of the 1930s and 40s
by Marsha Hunt

Review by Margarette Carr
Friends of the Lemon Grove Library

This is one lovely lady, and the fashion photos and movie stills from the first two decades of her career are riveting. This is a big, expensive book, beautifully published in Fallbrook on slick paper. Once I get started looking at these gorgeous pictures, I just can't stop. The pasta water boils over, the phone rings off the hook and I turn the pages and lose myself in a world of elegance and glamour.

This is a wonderfully fun book for anyone who enjoys fashion and/or the old movies.

The Cube
by Annie Gottlieb & Slobodan D. Pesic



Review by Ann Ruethling
Chinaberry Books

Once you read this book, you have to promise to keep the secret! The Cube is an imagination game, reportedly of ancient Sufi origin. It is perhaps an ancient teaching riddle, appearing and disappearing through the centuries, emerging when the soul needs it most. The Cube has been the rage in European coffee-houses. Playing The Cube reveals interesting insights into your life; but the best part is that it's fun! Read this book yourself and then share the fun with your friends. My family chuckled when we shared our results. The Cube's messages had us pegged. The Cube initiated some very enlightening conversations between my husband and me. Somehow the game revealed things to him that I have been trying to tell him for years — all in a very lighthearted way. It's a wonderful way to build intimacy between friends. However you use, remember once you have played The Cube: Keep the secret!

Happy Birthday, Jesus!

For the Mighty One has done great things for me — holy is his name. His mercy extends to those who fear him, from generation to generation. He has performed mighty deeds with his arm; he has scattered those who are proud in their inmost thought. He has brought down rulers from their thrones but has lifted up the humble. He has filled the hungry with good things but has sent the rich away empty.
